Description

In the context of the COVID-19 crisis, the European Commission, the European Committee for Standardisation (CEN) and the European Committee for Electrotechnical Standardisation (CENELEC), in collaboration with all their members, made several European standards for certain medical devices and personal protective equipment openly available.

Benefits

This action will help both EU and third-country companies that are willing to maximise medical equipment and manufacture these items to swiftly start production and place products on the internal market more easily while ensuring a high degree of safety

How open data is used

The European Commission opened up data on medical standards in order to increase its production by existing manufacturers, stimulate imports and activate alternative ways of producing equipment in times of the COVID-19 pandemic.
