Benefits

-  Facilitation of tasks – It helps organisations more efficiently construct proposals that support and engage their communities and are attractive for funders.
-  Data-driven evidence supports funding applications that are more compelling to grants givers, corporate sponsors and individual donors.

How open data is used

Culture Everywhere uses open census data and deprivation indices to reveal the need that smaller, grassroots and community-based arts and heritage organisations address and help them develop feasible projects that will find them partners and funders. Data is extracted from various public sources, including the National Census, Lottery Grants and Arts Council England.
